WHAT'S THE DEAL WITH LUCILLE?

She was a force to be reckoned with. She was girl power before there was girl power. She was America's first cowgirl.

Born in 1885, 22 years before Oklahoma became a state, Lucille Mulhall thrived in the wild frontier of Oklahoma territory. She defied every expectation of women of that era. She was tough, seasoned and skilled. She could rope and ride as well as any man. She could wrestle cattle four times her size. She was petite and beautiful. In short, Lucille was the whole package.

Sensing that America would love to see the skills used on their family ranch, Colonel Zack Mulhall (Lucille's father) decided to take the show on the road. The Mulhall Wild West show was a hit and even hosted Theodore Roosevelt as a guest. Lucille quickly became an audience favorite as they were amazed that such a petite girl could manhandle steers horses and ropes the way she could. One of the unknown performers, Will Rogers, dubbed Lucille as America's First Cowgirl. You can bet that no one had seen the likes of Lucille before. The public ate it up and Lucille became a beloved icon.

Though we've made her seem glamorous, Lucille was the real deal. A hard working, earnest cowgirl. She came by her talents honestly by learning them day in and day out on the ranch. She was tough and determined. Characteristics that we still admire today and wish we saw more of.

So welcome to Lucille's.....a place that celebrates small town America. A place where we root for the underdog. A place where we hope you'll kick back and enjoy a slower pace—at least for the time that you're here. We're glad you came— and hope to see you again real soon.

Raise your glass and let's hear it for Lucille.
